

My Dad Was a Dry-Cleaner...

My family's dry-cleaning business started back in the 1950s, when my parents moved from chilly Chicago to sunny Miami.

My dad, with help from my grandfather, opened a laundromat in Coconut Grove, and later bought Campus Cleaners, which became a local landmark serving the University of Miami and nearby residents for over 45 years.

I grew up working alongside my dad, learning the ropes from a young age—bagging clothes, checking pockets (you wouldn't believe what people leave behind!), and eventually taking on more responsibility.

I'm proud to continue the family tradition with White Collar Cleaners, offering the same dependable service, friendly attitude, and personal touch my dad was known for.

This is how I remember him and what impressed me the most. He taught me how to be who I am from example, and this is what I bring to you.

I promise to treat you like a good neighbor. That means, if you need something done quickly or have an emergency, just ask! I'll be glad to help.

I believe in building lifelong relationships and I'm always open to feedback to make your experience better. Please make sure to let me know how we can do that- If you have any questions about my service or for any other reason, call me.

I look forward to meeting you and it would be my pleasure to chat with you anytime.
